"Merry Christmas and Happy New Year."

This is the motto on the new issue of the Red Cross Christmas stamps, just printed. These will not be put on sale generally until the supply of "Merry Christmas" stamps runs out. And the way these pennies of the White Plague are going it is likely the first issue will be exhausted before Christmas Day.

This "New Year" stamp has come in answer to a general call for one that could be used throughout the holiday season. Many persons like to send greeting cards the first of the year, and with one accord hundreds have asked if the Red Cross stamp could be changed to fit this purpose. They are answered with the new stamp, which is just like the first one in design and color, with the addition of the New Year wish.

Make New Year Happy.

And who could devise a surer way of making this New Year a really happy one than by helping to stamp out tuberculosis? What a wonderfully happy New Year it will be when we can know that within the 365 days following the scourge will not claim tens of thousands from the bosoms of the land? What a different meaning the opening year will have when we can feel safe against this most destructive of all our enemies!

And this little stamp, which seems such a small matter, and is such a small mat-
